FIXED INDEXED ANNUITY

Never Lose a Penny Due to Market
Downturns with the “Power of Zero”

Navigating market fluctuations in retirement can be challenging. However, a fixed indexed annuity (FIA) can help ensure a portion of your money is protected from market downturns during these critical years with the "Power of Zero."

With FIAs, the minimum interest credited to the accumulation value of that indexed-related portion of your account will never be less than zero. This means that if the index falls or stays the same, your credited annuity value holds steady.

While not losing money in retirement is key, FIAs also give you the opportunity to capture some of the positive change in an external index, like the S&P 500, and grow your savings — without being directly invested in the market or an index.

Many indexed annuities also feature an annual reset design, which locks in indexed interest on your contract anniversary each year when there's a gain in the index.

As a result, you don't lose premium or previous gains during market downturns, and your annuity can still generate compound returns even in down years.

Preserve and Potentially Grow Your Assets with a Fixed Indexed Annuity from United Life

Due to longer life expectancies, it's essential to have a strategy to preserve and help grow your assets. Retirees seeking both stability and growth may find that FIAs offer greater financial confidence during market volatility and better growth potential than simply holding money in cash. Over the long term, this may lead to improved financial outcomes.
