

Guard Against Short-Term Duration Risk

PROBLEM

Your client wants to take advantage of the attractive interest rates offered on Fixed Annuities or Fixed Indexed Annuities (FIAs) but prefers a shorter-term duration of five years or less. History shows that what goes up will eventually come down, including interest rates, thus creating a short-term duration risk with potentially lower renewal rates after the surrender period.

Consider United Life's WealthChoice FIA, which offers a noteworthy fixed-interest option. While the declared rate for fixed interest can change annually, it is now guaranteed* to renew for at least 2.65% for the life of the contract.

POTENTIAL SOLUTION

Why is this guaranteed* renewal rate important?

As shown in the graph below, while the market yield on one-year U.S. Treasuries hovered near 5.0% in early 2007, the next 14 years recorded far lower yields. During that 14-year span those wishing to renew an FIA after the surrender period likely earned far lower rates than the initial rate when the FIA was secured.

A similar scenario could play out again as interest rates continue to dip. United Life's WealthChoice FIA may help shield against short-term duration risk with its guaranteed* renewal rate of 2.65%!
